Brooklyn's leading hitters were Gil Hodges (32 home runs, 102 RBI); Roy Campanella (22 homers, 97 RBI); and "Duke" Snider (21 dingers, 92 RBI, 162 hits.) Thirty-three old Jackie Robinson hit 19 home runs, drove in seventy-five, and led the Dodgers with 104 runs scored. Andy Pafko hit 19 homers as well. Brooklyn's 153 home runs led the National League, including their 775 runs scored, and 90 stolen bases. They hit .262 for the year...Joe Black was the pitching staff's top winner with 15 victories. Carl Erskine was next with 14 wins and led the staff with 131 K's. Billy Loes won thirteen while "Preacher" Roe and Ben Wade both won eleven times. The staff ERA of 3.53 was second in the National League...The '52 World Series ended in favor of the Yankees, four games to three. The two bitter rivals split the first four games with the Yanks taking the last two at Ebbets Field. The biggest play of the Fall Classic arguably was a desperation catch by Yankees' second baseman Billy Martin with two out and the bases loaded in the seventh inning of Game Seven. Facing the Yankees Bob Kuzava, Jackie Robinson hit a pop-up between the mound and first base. Kuzava hesitated for a moment, then Martin, who had been positioned deep near second base, came rushing in and caught the ball at his shoetops. With the base runners on the move, and the Yankees leading 4-2, Martin, who didn't start at second until the middle of the season, probably prevented the Dodgers from FINALLY having their day against New York... In the '52 Series, "Pee Wee" Reese hit .345 (10 for 29) with a homer; "Duke" Snider (aka "The Duke of Flatbush") matched Reese's batting figures, but hit four home runs and drove in eight. Joe Black was 1-2 in three starts. Robinson hit .174 with a homer.
