The 1950 season was the last "big" year for "The Yankee Clipper", Joe DiMaggio. The following season would see "Joltin' Joe" suffer through an injury plagued campaign which included a very sore heel ultimately leading to his retirement after the '51 World Series. In 1950, DiMaggio hit for a "triple double": 33 doubles, 10 triples, and 32 home runs. He scored 114 times and drove home 122 runs. "Old Reliable", the affable Tommy Henrich, decided 1950 would be his last season which proved him to be very reliable off the bench. He hit six home runs and drove in thirty-four. Yogi Berra slammed 28 homers and counted 124 RBI while Johnny Mize launched 25 dingers and drove home 72 runs. Phil Rizzuto led the ball club with 125 runs scored and 200 hits; Berra crossed the plate 116 times. "The Scooter" was named the league's MVP. As a team, the Yankees hit .282 and 159 homers--the latter third in the A.L. They led the league with 70 triples...A young 21-year old pitcher arrived on the scene named Edward "Whitey" Ford. He would wear Yankee pinstripes to a Hall of Fame career which concluded in 1964. Ford would go 9-1 in his rookie year with 12 starts and 59 strikeouts. Vic Raschi led the pitching staff with a record of 21-8 and 17 complete games. Eddie Lopat won eighteen and Allie Reynolds, who finished 16-12, led the staff with 160 K's. Tommy Byrne was 15-9. The Yankee staff had a 4.15 ERA, but led the A.L. in shutouts (11) and strikeouts (712)... "The Bronx Bombers" swept the N.L. champion Philadelphia "Whiz Kids" who could not figure out the Yankees in four games. Bobby Brown hit .333 in the Fall Classic with a double and a triple. DiMaggio hit .308 with a double and a homer. Berra hit a home run as well...Ford, Tom Ferrick, Raschi, and Reynolds all won a World Series game. It was the Yankees' thirteenth World Championship.
