The Tigers 103rd season saw the team break the American League record for losses in a campaign set by the Philadelphia Athletics in 1916 (117). They also came within one more loss of tying the '62 Mets for the worst record in major league history. The team ended the year with a 5.30 ERA. Detroit scored 337 fewer runs (591) than their opponents (928) after compiling a team batting average of .240--19 points below the American League average...After several Tigers (mainly sluggers Bobby Higginson and Juan Gonzalez) complained of the difficulty to hit home runs at Comerica Park since it opened in 2000, the distance to left-centerfield was reduced by 25 feet from 395' to 370' for 2003. A fence was installed in front of the original wall with the newly created space now the location of the bullpens...Dmitri Young led the team with 29 homers, 85 RBI, 167 hits, and 78 runs scored. Craig Monroe followed with 23 dingers and 70 RBI...Starter Mike Maroth (9-21 W/L record) topped the Tigers' pitching staff in wins. Jeremy Bonderman was the staff's leader in strikeouts (108). Maroth struck out 87 batters. Bonderman and Nate Cornejo (the latter completed two ball games) both won six contests...As a team, the Tigers were tenth in the A.L. after hitting 153 home runs.
