The Mariners could head home after their 38th season in Seattle feeling as though better days were to come. They were in playoff contention until the season's final day and played consistently well throughout the campaign. Halfway through the season they were in third place 7 ½ games out with a 43-38 record. They assumed the third spot in the AL West for good, June 2nd...Third baseman Kyle Seager topped the ball club with 25 homers and 96 RBI. Catcher Mike Zunino hit for a disappointing batting average but added some needed power with 22 dingers and 60 RBI. Robbie Cano led the ball club with 187 base hits, 77 runs scored, and 37 doubles. He contributed 14 home runs and 82 RBI to the offense after signing a huge free-agent pact with the M's. The Mariners hit .244 for the season and 136 home runs...Felix Hernandez and Hisashi Iwakuma both led the pitching staff with 15 wins. "King Felix" led the staff with 248 strikeouts and the A.L.'s lowest earned run average. Six-foot-ten righthander Chris Young had a nice season with a 12-9 record and 108 K's. Youngster Roenis Elias won ten and lost twelve. Closer Fernando Rodney whiffed 76 batters. The Mariners' hurlers led the league with a sparkling 3.17 ERA...The M's finished 11 games behind the AL West champ, Angels, against whom Seattle WON the season series, twelve games to seven.
