The 1967 White Sox were a tale of two teams. The pitching corps had the American League's best ERA (2.45) and allowed the fewest runs (491). At the plate, the Sox hit .225 (8th) and 89 home runs (9th). Their 531 runs scored placed them ninth. The staff was primarily behind Chicago's rise to first place from June 10th through August 13th before they slipped to second after a loss to the Twins. That loss placed them in a whirl-wind fight among the Red Sox, Tigers, and Twins for the league pennant the rest of the season. The front office made several trades for more offensive punch during the season but those bats turned out to be punch less. A double-header loss to the A's in Kansas City, September 27th, effectively ended their run. (A win in one of those games may have kept them well in the fight)...Joe Horlen, who finished with the league's lowest ERA (2.06) pitched a no-hitter against the Tigers, September 10th. He led the staff with 19 wins and 13 complete games. Lefty Gary Peters won 16 and topped the staff with 215 strikeouts...Pete Ward led the ballclub in homers (18) and RBI (62). Don Buford had the most base hits (129) while Tommie Agee (14 HR) led in runs scored (73).
