The Birds' encore season following their 1966 World Championship over the Dodgers was a humbling drop to a tie for sixth place with the Senators, 15 1/2 games in back of the AL pennant-winning Red Sox. The ballclub fell below .500 for the remainder of the year on June 16th (sixth place, six games out) after a doubleheader loss to the Angels in Baltimore. By the All Star break, they were nine out, in seventh place with a 39-43 record. The second half was no better (37-42)...Frank Robinson, triple crown winner and AL MVP after his first year with The Birds, led the team with 30 home runs and 94 RBI. Brooks Robinson (77 RBI) and Curt Blefary (81) followed with both swatting 22 homers. Brooks was the team leader in base hits (164) and runs scored (88). Twenty-three-year-old Paul Blair completed a "triple double" after posting 11 home runs, 12 triples, and 27 doubles. As a team, the Orioles hit .240 and 138 homers, both figures third-best in the league...The pitching staff had Tom Phoebus on the top perch off his 14 wins, 179 K's, 114 walks, and seven complete games. He tossed four shutouts. Jim Palmer, 21, a huge bright spot and strong contributor to the O's World Series crown, pitched a severely limited number of innings (and would miss ALL of 1968) with arm miseries and eventual surgery. He had been 15-10 in '66. Jim Hardin won eight games. The staff ERA was 3.32 (6th in the A. L.).
