"Hammerin' Hank" Aaron finished the season tied for scoring the most runs in the big leagues [113] with Lou Brock and leading the National League in home runs [39] as well as slugging percentage [.573]. Aaron, now 32, was seventh in the majors with a .943 OPS. He also topped the Braves with 184 base hits and 109 RBI. Clete Boyer walloped 26 jacks and drove home 96 while Joe Torre, 26, added 20 home runs and 68 RBI. Before Thurman Munson came along, it too, appeared the bullish Torre played with his chest protector under his Braves' jersey. Atlanta hit .240 as a team and the most home runs in the N. L. [158], no surprise after playing their second season in a ballpark later called "The Launching Pad."...Pat Jarvis [15 wins] and Ken Johnson [13] topped the pitching staff which put up a 3.47 ERA at the close of the year. Phil Niekro, 28, who pitched as a starter and reliever, won 11 games and posted the majors' lowest ERA; his knuckleball cost him 19 wild pitches... The '67 Braves finished with the most losses for the franchise since 1952, their final year in Boston. Manager Billy Hitchcock was fired September 28".
