Under pressure from the Commissioners office to do SOMETHING about Billy Martin's off-field shenanigans (including a fight Martin "won" against a marshmallow salesman), George Steinbrenner fired the Yankee skipper following the 1979 season. Now with Martin's availability, and his reputation to quickly turn-around struggling ballclubs, Charlie Finley decided to hire the unemployed manager to take over on-field stewardship of the A's. (Martin had also spent his formative years in the Bay Area.) Billy propelled the team to 29 more wins than in '79 and from the worst record in the majors to second place in the AL West. At his disposal he had 21-year-old Rickey Henderson who broke Ty Cobb's American League stolen base record. Martin also could call on a group of starting pitchers who completed 94 games at a time when that statistic was becoming less and less important. Mike Norris, 25, finished the year with 22 wins, 9 losses, and 24 complete games. Rick Langford was a 19-game winner and led the staff with 28 complete games. Matt Keough, 24, (16 victories, 20 complete games) and Steve McCatty, 26, (14 W's, 11 complete games) rounded out the top-four starters. This quartet as a unit had a 3.36 ERA and 83 complete games. The A's staff posted the league's best earned run average (3.46) and allowed the fewest runs (566). Norris was the strikeout leader (180)...Henderson led the A's in batting average, base hits (179), and runs scored (111). Tony Armas's 35 jacks and 105 RBI were team highs. The high-flyin', very aggressive A's, playing what would be termed "Billy Ball," were second in the A. L. in stolen bases (175), eleventh in batting average (.259), and sixth in home runs (137). Oakland held sole possession of first place (one-half game) as late as May 17th. After the All Star break they went 47-34 (.580)...Martin was named AL Manager of the Year by the Associated Press...Finley, who purchased the franchise in 1960 when it played in Kansas City, ended his reign in the Owner's Box early in 1981 after selling the team to Walter A. Haas, Jr. Haas would sell the A's in 1995.
