The Yankees of 2021 and their legions shared a difficult season if not an interesting one. The question raged all summer long: "What to do with Gleyber Torres?" The only viable option for the everyday shortstop for most of the year, Torres's fielding was profoundly wanting, but his bat was needed in the line-up. DJ LeMahieu was highly valued, of course, but his season did not mirror 2020 at all. Aaron Hicks was lost for the season early on; Gerrit Cole was GOOD but not REAL GOOD; and the acquisitions of power bats Anthony Rizzo and Joey Gallo helped but did not put the Bronx Bombers over the top. The entire campaign was spent chasing the Rays and the Red Sox. The season high for the Yankees was 24 games over .500 on August 27th, their largest deficit was 10 games September 12th. From August 1st to the season's conclusion, the Yanks went 37-22 to tie Boston for second place of the AL East. With New York and the Red Sox the Wild Card entrants in the post-season, they met head-on in the AL Wild Card Game in Boston, the Yankees losing 6-2...Team Leaders: Aaron Judge (39 HR, 98 RBI); the revitalized Giancarlo Stanton (35 HR, 97 RBI); and Gary Sanchez (23 HR). Newcomers Rizzo and Gallo added 8 and 13 jacks, respectively...Cole was the pitching staff's leader (16 wins, 243 K's). No one else came close. Highly touted Luis Severino pitched in only four games, all in relief. Battling back from a broken arm in 2019, and one inning pitched for Texas in 2020, Corey Kluber rebounded with a no-hitter (12th in Yankees history) May 19th, a 2-0 win over Texas. He struck out nine Rangers and walked one in the third inning. He was 5-3 for the season.
