Within two years of their World Series title, the Nationals, with a record of 48-56 and a team considered out of contention for the post-season, were gutted by GM Mike Rizzo at the trading deadline, July 31 st. The biggest hit was a package of Max Scherzer and Trea Turner being traded to the Dodgers. Kyle Schwarber, signed as a free agent, was dealt to the Red Sox. Closer Brad Hand was moved as well. Add to that the loss of Stephen Strasburg once again to injury and later surgery. Starlin Castro was released after being charged with domestic abuse while Jon Lester was shipped to the Cardinals. Victor Robles never got untracked and was banished to the minor leagues. The replacements could hardly make up for those traded away. The Nats were 17-41 from August 1 st on...Juan Soto, 22, led the ballclub with 29 homers, 95 RBI, 111 runs, and a major league high 145 walks. Josh Bell racked up 27 jacks; Schwarber before his trade, belted 25 homers, 16 of those in an 18-game span in June. Ryan Zimmerman, 36, enjoyed a bounce-back year with 14 home runs and 46 RBI. Patrick Corbin disappointed with a 9-16 campaign. Scherzer, 8-4, before moving to L. A., struck out 147 and posted a 0.892 WHIP.
