The Giants of '81 were never serious contenders during a season split into halves by a players' strike which began June 12th. Frank Robinson's ballclub ended the first half in fifth place of the NL West (27-32) but improved over the second half, finishing in third place six games over .500 at 29-23. Overall for the year, the Giants ended the disrupted season in fourth place, 11 ½ games in back of leader Cincinnati. Against division foes, the Giants were 30-36...Twenty-five-year-old slugger Jack Clark led the team at the plate with his 17 homers and 53 RBI. Veteran third-sacker Darrell Evans, 34, added 12 home runs and 48 RBI. Milt May had the highest batting average among the regulars and wound up the year in seventh place for the N. L. batting title. Joe Morgan, 37, returned to his Bay Area roots and contributed eight jacks, 31 RBI, and a valuable, steady glove up the middle for the defense...Doyle Alexander was the Number One arm on the starting staff after recording 11 wins and a sub-3.00 ERA. The Giants hurlers were third in the league in ERA (3.28). Closer Greg Minton finished third in the majors in saves...During his prime, one of the most sought after hitters in the game, "Chili" Davis, made his debut at age 21 against the Padres as a pinch-hitter in the eighth inning, April 10th. Davis became a regular in the outfield the following year...Larry Herndon slashed eight triples; Morgan walked 66 times in 308 ABs.
