Major league baseball's contentious relations between the players and owners came to a head in 1981 with the longest strike in the history of the game at that point. Play was halted June 12th and would not resume until August 10th. The abbreviated schedule was split into two half-seasons, resulting in an expanded post-season. The situation provided no advantage for the M's. When MLB was shut down, Seattle had a 21-36 record for the first half...When former Dodger great Maury Wills was hired as manager in 1980, he had boasted he could take any last place team to a World Series title within four years. Only 24 games into his second year, he was fired after the team posted a 6-18 record, the worst start in franchise history. His managing style apparently wasn't conducive for winning baseball--players, writers, and fans alike often were left scratching their heads when analyzing some of his strategies and on-field direction. Rene Lachemann, the Triple A skipper, took over May 6th and led the team to four straight wins...Team Leaders: Designated hitter Richie Zisk (16 home runs); Tom Paciorek (14 jacks, 66 RBI, 28 doubles); Floyd Bannister (9 wins, 85 strikeouts). Julio Cruz ended the year third in the big leagues in stolen bases. Paciorek was third in the majors in batting average...The M's uniforms were stolen during a series in Texas. On May 30th, they took the field donned in their batting practice jerseys and completed their wardrobe improvisation utilizing Rangers batting helmets topped off with ball caps of the Milwaukee Brewers purchased at a concession stand. (Arlington Stadium did not have Mariners caps for sale to the public.)...California real-estate whiz George Argyros bought the franchise for $12.5 million dollars in January '81...Prior to Wills' firing, he was suspended for two games and fined $500 for trying to gain his hitters an advantage against breaking pitches by having the Kingdome grounds crew illegally expand the batters boxes by a foot. None other than A's manager Billy Martin noticed the discrepancy and alerted the umpires of Wills' shenanigans, April 25th.
