The Buccos opened the season with a flourish and were in first place at the end of the first week. Then a tallspin which saw them go 4-22 through May 20th had them spiraling to last place. The year turned around the following day with a 6-1 win over the Braves in Milwaukee. That victory, followed by eleven straight more, moved them to seventh, 7 1/2 games out and three games under .500. Roberto Clemente, who would go on to capture his third National League batting crown, got off to a horrific start due to a freak injury at home in Puerto Rico during the off-season. An injury to one of his legs was aggravated by his willingness to play and hindered him in the season's early days. However, "The Great One" turned all that around during the team's aforementioned 12-game winning streak. He hit a blistering .458. At All Star time, the Pirates were sixth and six games in arrears. The rest of the campaign, the Buccs regained their batting prowess (.265 team BA in '65, 2nd in the league) and the pitching was magnificent (second overall at 3.01). The "Jolly Roger" was raised 46 times in 75 games during the second half, a .613 winning percentage. The high point came after a double-header sweep of the Dodgers in Pittsburgh, September 1st, placing the Buccs in fifth but only 2 1/2 games out of first. Thereafter, they went 17-10 to reach third and seven games out to finish the season...Clemente's batting average was the highest in the big leagues—.008 points above the Twins hitting machine, Tony Oliva. He also finished tied with teammate Donn Clendenon and the Phillies' Dick Allen for the second most triples in the majors (14). Clendenon himself was tenth in doubles (32) while 25-year-old Wilver Dornel "Willie" Stargell drove in 107 runs (6th in the majors) and blasted National League pitching for 27 jacks. One hundred forty-nine of Clemente's 194 hits were singles (4th in MLB)...Six foot six lefty Bob Veale, 29, ended the year third in the majors with 276 strikeouts (9.338 per nine innings). He walked 119, completed 14 games, and hurled seven shutouts. Even though two long-time Buccos were nearing the end of their respective careers, Vernon Law, 35, and Bob Friend, 34, were prime contributors to the pitching staff. Law won 17 ballgames, his ERA third in MLB behind Sandy Koufax. His WHIP was 0.998. Veale also won 17 times; Friend added eight W's, walking 1.91 batters/9 innings.
