The Braves led the big leagues in home runs (196) and their young pitching staff was very dependable (3.52 ERA, 4th in the N. L.) during a season they were contenders for the pennant right into September. The ballclub was in fifth place, 5 ½ games out of first at the All Star break. When play resumed, they split a twin-bill with the Cubs in Chicago, the night-cap a 6-3 win propelling them on a 10-game consecutive winning streak and a jump to third with a three-game deficit when it ended, July 22nd. In August, they won 19 of 23 games to hop into first by a half-game. On September 11th, they essentially fell out of contention after a 1-0, 10-inning loss to the Mets in New York. After that date, the team was 7-13 the rest of the way...The Braves had SIX players hit at least 21 home runs led by Hank Aaron and Eddie Mathews who both clubbed 32. Mack Jones blasted 31 while Joe Torre, 24, added 27 and drove home 80. Aaron's 89 RBI were just six behind team leader Mathews. "Hammerin' Hank" finished high among major league sluggers with a .379/.560/.938 on-base percentage, slugging percentage, OPS slash. He led the league with 40 doubles...Twenty-four-year-old Tony Cloninger was second to Sandy Koufax's big league high in wins (24). He struck out 211 opponents but allowed 119 walks. Wade Blasingame, 21, was a 16-game winner who gave up 116 bases on balls and punched out 117 batters. Cloninger completed 16 ballgames, good for sixth in MLB...This was the last campaign for the Braves in Milwaukee--a 13-year run with 1,146 wins, a .563 winning percentage, and an average of 88 wins per season. After 1961, attendance had significantly dropped off fueling a move south to Atlanta, a plan contemplated as early as 1964. The Braves NEVER had a losing season in Milwaukee, including two World Series appearances and a World Championship.
