The return of one-time prodigal manager Tony La Russa to the White Sox dugout proved to be a brief regime. On August 30th, the 77-year old La Russa relinquished the leadership of the team to bench coach Miguel Cairo in order to undergo medical tests referred by his personal doctors. He later received a heart pace-maker and treatment for other health issues with a plan for his return to the bench near the end of the season. On September 24th, La Russa retired to the sidelines, apparently for good. His 63 wins in 2022 gave him 678 career victories covering about 10 seasons as the White Sox field manager. At the time of his departure, August 28th, the ballclub was in third place only five games out of the AL Central lead. At the end of the year, their deficit was 11 games behind Cleveland...The Sox hit .256 as a team (3rd in the league) which featured seven players with double-digit homer numbers. Andrew Vaughn tallied the most four-baggers (17) and RBI (76). Eloy Jimenez followed with 16 jacks. Free-agent-to-be, first baseman Jose Abreu, slammed 15 homers and was second with 75 RBL...Fire-balling Dylan Cease, 26, stepped into the lime-light with 14 wins and 227 strikeouts to lead the pitching staff. He finished second in league Cy Young Award voting. Liam Hendricks's save total was also number two among A. L. relievers...Perhaps the team's best player, All Star Tim Anderson, was lost for the year, August 9th, with a torn hand ligament. In 79 games, he hit six homers and drove home 25 mates.
