Coming off a NL West division crown and franchise-setting 107 victories, the Giants appeared headed for the post-season once more. Their high-mark for the year came June 18th, ten games over .500 at 37-27. After 81 games, the record stood at 44-37; the second half of the season was a flip of the first: 37-44 as the ballclub won only 21 of 55 games over July and August. Injuries stole almost half of Brandon Belt's season while Brandon Crawford and Evan Longoria spent a good deal of time on the injured list as well. The Giants ended 12th in the league in batting (.234) but sixth in home runs (183). Joc Pederson's 23 jacks topped the ballclub. Wilmer Flores was next with 19 and drove home 71 to lead the team. Pederson added 70 RBI...Logan Webb pocketed the most wins on the pitching staff (15). Carlos Rodon was very good all season long. He won 14 and punched out 237 batters, the latter third-most in the big leagues. His strikeouts/nine innings ratio (11.983) topped the list.
