The Giants got off to a great start, holding first place after winning 30 of their first 48 games, ending the month of May. They spent 55 calendar days in the top spot (or tied), the last day June 24th when they were up a half-game. For the rest of the season, they were a .500 ball club, falling as low as fifth on July 20th, ten games out. Head-to-head against the teams who finished the season above them, the Giants were 17-19 (9-9 vs. the Dodgers, 8-10 vs. the Cardinals)...This team carried a lot of clout! They hit the most homers in the league (197). Willie McCovey tied Hank Aaron for second place in the big leagues with forty-four. Willie Mays, now well into his prime, hit 38 (fifth in MLB), finished 5th with 103 RBI, and second in total bases (347). Mays produced a slash of .380/.582/.962 (on-base percentage, slugging percentage, on-base plus slugging percentage). He was number two in the majors in the latter two categories. "Big Mac," meanwhile, drove home 102 runs and scored 103. "The Baby Bull," Orlando Cepeda, used his war club to finish just ahead of Mays in batting average, .316 to .314, both among MLB's top seven. "Cha Cha" was right behind Mays with a .929 OPS...Juan Marichal had an elite Cy Young-type season: 25 wins (tying Sandy Koufax for the most in the majors), 2.41 ERA (6th), WHIP (.996, 3rd), and strikeouts (248, 4th). Marichal also pitched the most innings in the big leagues (321.1)--a figure we'll likely never see again. Add to his mantle 18 complete games and five shutouts, all among major league leaders. Marichal, with his iconic high leg kick, no-hit Houston June 15th, striking out five and walking two at Candlestick Park. Jack Sanford won 16 ballgames and completed eleven. Billy O'Dell took home 14 wins.
