A positive stat for the Red Sox was 41 come-from-behind victories--about 54 percent of their total wins. The season's high point after May was 10 games above .500 when they were 49-39, in second place 5 ½ games out, July 15th. By the end of the month they had dropped to fourth. Eleven wins over 31 games in August ended any hopes for contention. Offensively, the Bosox hit .252 (second in the A. L.) and 171 homers (third). Carl Yastrzemski, in his third full major league season, was the league batting champion and leader with 40 doubles, 183 base hits, and 95 walks. His .418 on-base percentage was the highest in the big leagues. "Yaz" finished second behind the Dodgers Willie Davis's .326 major league leading batting average and seventh in OPS (.894). The local prodigy also was awarded his first of six career Gold Gloves. Dick Stuart provided plenty of power as well with 42 home runs (4th in MLB), 118 RBI (2nd), and a .521 slugging percentage (8th)...The pitching staff was ninth in league ERA (3.97) but second with 1,009 strikeouts. Bill Monbouquette, who had pitched a no-hitter against the White Sox in 1962, won 20 ballgames and whiffed 174 batters. Six foot six closer Dick Radatz won 15 times out of the bullpen and wound up second in the majors in saves. He tallied the fifth-most votes for league MVP. Among big league pitchers with the most walks, Earl Wilson's 105 were at the top of the list while Dave Morehead allowed 99 (3rd).
