Inertia is back in fashion with the Pirates. Another year saw players of any value traded elsewhere with more prospects from the low minors inducted into the farm system. (At least Bryan Reynolds [24 HRs, 88 RBI] is signed through 2031.) The season saw the emergence of 22-year-old flamethrower and the National League's Rookie of the Year Paul Skenes (11-3 record, 170 K's, <2.00 ERA) opening eyes WIDE all over baseball. Management finally concluded Oneil Cruz (21 HRs, 76 RBI) is not an everyday shortstop. He became an experiment in centerfield late in the year. Ke'Bryan Hayes (4 HRs, 25 RBI) suffered through a season-long slump due to injury. Starter Mitch Keller, at the top of the mound staff, won 11 ballgames. Andrew McCutchen (20 HRs, 50 RBI) became a free agent at the end of the season and voiced an interest to keep playing and remain a Pirate. His career, with 11 of his 16 seasons in Pittsburgh, features 319 home runs; 1,095 RBI; 219 stolen bases and lifetime .273 batting average. The former #1 draft pick (11th overall, 2005) by the Buccos hit his 300th career home run, April 24th.
